

Jordi Barrat

Professor of Public Law at the University of Catalonia/Universitat Rovira i Virgili (URV). He holds a PhD in Public Law from the University of León, Spain. Since his research is focused on electoral issues and human rights—how legal regulations may enhance political participation, in particular how new technologies are being deployed in the electoral field—, he has been involved in a wide range of electronic voting research projects covering many countries using electronic voting technologies, including Internet voting. He has taken part in international consultancies and assistance missions to Argentina, Belgium, Costa Rica, El Salvador, France, Honduras, Mexico, Moldova, Montenegro, Norway, and Venezuela, on behalf of the Council of Europe, IFES, International IDEA, OAS, and OSCE/ODIHR.
